November 11-12 (2005) – Melbourne (Australia)

Translation and/as Culture. The conference will focus on the relations between translation and ‘culture’. Concepts of translation have developed alongside and as part of a range of different modes of importing and exporting texts and other cultural products in various parts of the world. The emergence in recent decades of a broadly based discipline of translation studies has created a framework that enables us to study these concepts and practices in their historical and cultural contexts. The conference will provide a forum for mapping forms and concepts of translation, adaptation and transformation in diverse cultures, and will seek to address the hermeneutic and methodological issues raised by such comparisons.

May 17-20 (2006) – Bertinoro (Italy)

GLAT – Bertinoro 2006 : "Methodological Aspects of the Creation of Mono-lingual and Multi-lingual Lexicons." The need to be understood, whether in countries of more than one language or within a framework of the multitude of specialist languages derived from economic, judicial, scientific, sporting or any other relations generated by globalization, has produced a disproportionate number of mono-lingual and multi-lingual lexicons. These are to be found in printed form or more and more in electronic format - "on-line dictionaries".

May 27-30 (2006) – Toronto (Canada)

19th Annual Conference of the Canadian Association for Translation Studies: “Translating the Americas”. We know now that the continent we call America is in reality made up of many and diverse "Americas", with four main languages imposed by colonizers and dozens of others that still survive. Could we then imagine these Americas making up a translated continent? Or a continent of translation or translators? What space does translation occupy in this super-continent? What is its role? Do these vary from one "America" to the next?

August 24-26 (2006) – Bolzano (Italy)

Multilingualism across Europe: findings, needs, best practices. The linguistic diversity in Europe is a source of richness that is highly valued not only as an element of identification. This conference on multilingualism in Europe provides a forum for researchers from the fields of linguistics, language teaching and language policy for discussion and exchange of findings and outlooks. At the same time this conference will be the closing event of Language Bridges, a project that examines and puts in contrast various aspects of multilingualism in six European border regions.
