

Contributors

Jan Gustafsson is an associate professor at the Center for the Study of the Americas, Copenhagen Business School. His main areas of research and academic interest are: Latin American and Latino politics and culture, including popular culture and identity constructions, identity theory, semiotics. He has a particular interest in Cuba and the national and transnational construction of Cuban identities. He has also written on the subject of utopian political thinking in Latin America. He is director of the Center for the Study of the Americas at the Copenhagen Business School.

Kevin A. Johnson (B.A., Speech Communication, California State University, Long Beach, 1999; M.A., Communication Studies, California State University, Long Beach, 2002; Ph.D., Communication Studies, University of Texas at Austin, 2007) is Director of Research at the Center for First Amendment Studies at California State University, Long Beach.

Elizabeth Kella is a Senior Lecturer at Södertörn University, Sweden. Her teaching and research interests are in ethnic American literatures. She is currently completing a co-authored project on tropes of orphanhood in contemporary American literature.

Fredrik Olsson is a doctoral candidate in Spanish at the University of Gothenburg. He is currently working on a thesis about identity, borders, and migration to the U.S. in contemporary Latin American narratives. He obtained a Master's degree in Estudios Hispánicos from the University of Cádiz.

Antonio L. Vásquez is currently a doctoral candidate in American Studies and Chicano/Latino Studies at Michigan State University. His dissertation research focuses on historical and contemporary experiences of Mexican migration and settlement in the American South.

