

Contributors

Edward Ashbee is an associate professor at Copenhagen Business School. He is author of American Society Today (Manchester University Press, 2002) and US Politics Today (Manchester University Press, 2004). He has also written articles on a range of topics including the Republican Party and race, immigration policy, and contemporary attitudes towards sexual morality.

Lene Johannessen is a post-doctoral research fellow at the University of Bergen. Her research interests and publications are in American, Latino/a, and postcolonial literatures and cultures, theories of language, politics and theories of identity. Her current project, "The Architectonics of Memory in Exile and Migration," explores the topology of the migratory in American literature.

Ole O. Moen is an associate professor of American Civilization at the Department of British and American Studies, University of Oslo. Moen is Secretary General of the European Association for American Studies and Contributing Editor for Norway of the Journal of American History. He is also a commentator on American culture and politics on national radio and television. His most recent book is Race, Color, and Partial Blindness: Affirmative Action under the Law (Oslo, 2001).

Alan Shima is a senior lecturer in American literature at Gävle University College. He has written a book-length study on contemporary feminist theory and poetry and articles addressing the intersecting issues of language, culture, and national identities.

Stephen Wolfe is an associate professor of British and American literature at the University of Tromsø. He has published articles on eighteenth- and nineteenth-century British literature, contemporary American writers and critics, and on teaching and research in the Humanities. His current research interests are in “double-facing” texts which expose the workings of colonialism in Britain and America in the eighteenth century.