

Contributors

Rani-Henrik Andersson is a CORE Fellow at the University of Helsinki Collegium for Advanced Studies and Senior University Lecturer of North American Studies. He is the author or editor of nine books including the Lakota Ghost Dance of 1890 (University of Nebraska Press, 2008). His most recent book A Whirlwind Passed Through Our Country: Lakota Voices of the Ghost Dance (University of Oklahoma Press, 2018) focuses on Lakota accounts of the Ghost Dance and the Wounded Knee Massacre. One of his current projects is entitled “Traditional Indigenous Ecological Knowledge, Re-Indigenization and Protected Spaces of Nature.” He can be reached at rani-henrik.andersson@helsinki.fi

Juan Francisco Belmonte-Ávila is an Assistant Professor in English Studies at the Complutense University of Madrid. He has been a Fulbright doctoral and post-doctoral researcher at Indiana University and University of Utah, and a government-funded FPI grant recipient at the University of Murcia. He has also been a visiting scholar at McGill University and IT University-Copenhagen. His main areas of research are Cultural Studies, American Studies, and Game Studies. His work has appeared in Continuum, L’Atalante, Cartaphilus, Bit y aparte, and Digitum, among others, and in edited collections such as Playing with Virtuality, eds. Bigl and Stoppe (P. Lang 2013). He can be reached at jfbelav@gmail.com.

Mikael Blomdahl is currently Assistant Professor in Political Science at Linköping University. His recent publications include articles in Comparative Strategy, Diplomacy and Statecraft, and Armed Forces and Society. His primary research interests are Foreign Policy Analysis, U.S. foreign policy, humanitarian interventions, bureaucratic politics in foreign policy and re-examining the diversionary theory of war. He can be reached at mikael.blomdahl@liu.se.

Francis Flavin, Ph.D., is a historian for the United States Department of the Interior in Washington, DC, and a research associate at the American Indian Studies Research Institute at Indiana University in Bloomington, Indiana. In addition, he has a bachelor of science degree in computer science from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and has significant experience in building dynamic network models. Before coming to Washington, DC, he was a visiting assistant professor in historical studies at the University of Texas at Dallas. His contributions here reflect his own personal work and do not represent his employer in any way. He can be reached at francis.flavin@gmail.com.

Ari Helo is a Senior University Lecturer in North American Studies at the University of Helsinki. Helo's books and scholarly articles have been published in Britain, Estonia, Finland, Hungary, the Netherlands, Russia, and the United States. He has recently finished his third monograph, History, Politics, and the American Past: Essays on Methodology (Routledge, 2020). He can be reached at ari.helo@helsinki.fi.

Saara Kekki is a post-doctoral researcher at the University of Helsinki Department of Cultures. Her dissertation (2019, passed with distinction), explored the networks of Japanese Americans incarcerated at Heart Mountain, Wyoming, during World War II. She is interested in networks and the history of immigration. She can be reached at saara.kekki@helsinki.fi

Zoltán Peterecz teaches as an associate professor at the Institute of English and American Studies at Eszterházy Károly University, Eger, Hungary. His main fields of research are American history, American foreign affairs, and American-Hungarian relations in the first half of the twentieth century. He is the author of close to a hundred articles and book reviews that appeared both in English- and Hungarian-language journals. His books include Jeremiah Smith, Jr. and Hungary, 1924–1926: the United States, the League of Nations, and the Financial Reconstruction of Hungary (Versita, 2013) and A kivételes Amerika. [The Exceptional America] (Gondolat, 2016). He can be reached at zpeterecz@yahoo.com.

Frida Stranne is a Senior Lecturer in Political Science at Halmstad University and an affiliated researcher at Swedish Institute for North American Studies, Uppsala University. Her main areas of interest are US Foreign and security policy; i.e. driving forces and key aspects behind US military expansion and developments towards a superpower status. Her publications include “Tankesmedjors roll i amerikansk (utrikes)politik,” in Vinklade budskap – perspektiv på politisk kommunikation (Halmstad University Press), 181-199. She can be reached at frida.stranne@hh.se.

Juan Antonio Suárez is a Professor in English Studies at the University of Murcia. He is the author of Bike Boys, Drag Queens, and Superstars (Indiana University Press, 1997), Pop Modernism (University of Illinois Press 2007), and Jim Jarmusch (University of Illinois Press 2007), and the co-editor, with D. Walton, of The Spatial Politics of Contemporary Fiction (P. Lang, 2017). His recent essays have appeared in Grey Room, Screen, L'Atalante, The Journal of Cinema and Media Studies, and in edited collections such as The Music and Sound of Experimental Cinema, eds. Rogers and Barham (Oxford University Press, 2017). He can be reached at jsuarez@um.es.